In their leisure time, Vikings liked to play as much as any other people of the time. We do know a simple plow called an ard was used to cut grooves through the soil in preparation for sowing.

The Sagas of Icelanders The medieval Icelandic sagas are wondrous literary works. Vikings enjoyed drinking ale and mead at feasts. The events themselves took place a few hundred years before, which is why they should be considered fiction, not fact. However, this clothing is not contemporary with the events of the saga as it is in this context the appointment of Eric as sub-king would make perfect sense.
