The extension of the disciplinary gaze of the smoke inspector into the more abstract concerns of atmospheric security can be discerned in Birmingham almost immediately after the Public Health Act. According to Crary, to be an observer is to be both attentive to rules and objects: to observe norms and regulations as well as things Crary, 5–6. MaxwellT. The pan-urban scale of the Manchester survey was organised by the use of Police Division Districts as a way of spatially ordering observations. The fact that Foucault asserts the importance of scientific rationality within his history of government without providing a detailed account of the role of scientific practices within the State, while SSK provides a rich body of historical analysis of the practical relationships between science and politics, could easily lead us to unthinkingly, but conveniently, adopt these two assumptions. You submitted the following rating and review. But it is important to reflect upon two further conceptual aspects of the notion of government with science before we move on.
