Before he died defending the family honour, the brother of the raped peasant had hidden the last member of the family, his younger sister. He was a sympathiser with the poor, the suffering, and the oppressed; and by his death, one of England's greatest writers is A Tale of Two Cities to the world. Manette has been given lodgings by his former servant Ernest Defarge and his wife Therese, owners of a wine shop. The "golden arm" an arm-and-hammers symbol an ancient sign of the gold-beater. Both those quotes? Richard Maxwell's introduction discusses the intricate interweaving of epic drama with personal tragedy. Under duress, he does so, and then makes a dash for it. By threatening to denounce Solomon to the revolutionary tribunal as a Briton, Carton blackmails him into helping with a plan. So riled is Dickens at the brutality of English law that he depicts some of its punishments with sarcasm: "the whipping-post, another dear old institution, very humanising and softening to behold in action".
