France But the Banque de France and Finance bureaucracies resisted, dragged their feet, made excuses for not financing Soviet exports.

Once again the Finance Ministry balked on technical grounds, alleging this
There was little government instability, but the Five Year Plan, entailing the collectivization of peasant holdings led to tremendous dislocation and suffering in the countryside.

This was a diplomatic innovation and was legally contentious. In response to a request from the Italian government for information on the situation of industrialists renewed their complaints about inadequate credit for Soviet trade: they did not care a pin about the tsarist debts; their order books were empty and their plants, shut .
