This, of course, entails much scrupulous work of detailed historical research, as well as the ability to articulate it within the translational process. He struggled to prove himself worthy of the trust and respect not just of his brother-in-law, but also of other foreign merchants who had already established their names in the Portuguese market. An examination of the book translated at the DTN shows that at least 25 books were Note pratiche di bachicoltura. The historiographical value of the letters lies in the fact that they contain accounts that were neither censored nor doctored: no one ever scrutinised or edited the stories, which were simply committed to paper without any concern for accuracy, trustworthiness or factuality. He felt uprooted and disengaged. In any case, the search for the right equivalent would have always been time-consuming. Italians were migrating from different parts of Italy, carrying with them very different cultural backgrounds.
